3. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow : 2×5=10

Almost six decades after my first race in 1953, I have come to the sad conclusion that the decline of sports is also because, somewhere over the years, Indian athletes have lost the killer instinct when it comes to winning events at the international level. In China, kids are selected at a very young age and they train year after year. Talented young athletes are required to undergo a strict training regime. Their coaches are equally resolute because they know that they are entirely responsible for their trainees' success or failure. How very different this systematic approach is from the lackadaisical manner in which we try to develop our sportspersons. Selections in India are ad hoc, often dictated by political dictats, or through personal contacts and connections. What India needs today is a firm goal to aspire towards. Success in Olympics should be our ambition, but to achieve that end, we need international-level coaching, and for that I would strongly recommend emulating the Chinese, right from creating a world-class sports infrastructure to spotting and grooming kids with talent. Give the talented kids professional guidance, use scientific training methods, discipline them if their standard fall, and above all, inspire and motivate them. And, if we are really serious about wanting to improve the situation, we need to be more careful about our selection of coaches : hire those who are capable, give them four-year contracts on the assurance that their contracts will be renewed only after they have produced some tangible results.

Questions :

- (a) What is the main weakness of Indian athletes?
- (b) Mention any two reasons that have made China a superpower in sports.
- (c) How should India train her athletes to achieve success in Olympic games?
- (d) What care should be taken while selecting a coach?
- (e) Use the following word in a sentence of your own : MOTIVATE

4. Write a précis of the following passage and give it a suitable title : 8+2=10

British rule produced radical and lasting changes in Indian society and culture . It was unlike any previous period in Indian history as the British brought with them new technology, institutions, knowledge, beliefs and values. The new technology, and the revolution in communications which this brought about, enabled the British to integrate the country as never before in its history. During the nineteenth century the British slowly laid the foundations of a modern state by surveying land, settling the revenue, creating a modern bureaucracy, army and police, instituting law courts, codifying the law, developing communications – railways, post and telegraph, roads and canals – establishing schools and colleges, and so on. The British also brought with them the printing press which brought about profound changes in Indian life. One obvious result was that books and journals, along with schools, made possible the transmission of modern as well as the traditional knowledge to large number of Indians – knowledge which could no longer be the privilege of a few, hereditary groups– while the newspapers made people in different parts of the country realize they had common bonds, and that events happening in the outside world influenced their lives for good or ill.
