Important Sites

Markandeshwar Temple, Maharashtra

Archaeological Survey of India initiated the restoration work of Markandeshwar temple in Maharashtra.

Known as the “Khajuraho of Vidarbha”, the temple of Markandadeo is situated on the bank of River Wainganga in district Gadchiroli of Maharashtra.

Phuggaon, Maharashtra

- The recent excavation carried out by Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) at Maharashtra’s Phuggaon has revealed evidence of an Iron Age settlement in the Vidarbha region.
- The site is situated in the vast meander of the river Purna, a major tributary of Tapi, which used to be a perennial river, but at present is completely dried-up due to the dam construction in the upper stream.
- Chronologically, the site could be placed between 7th C BCE and 4th C BCE.

Gottiprolu, Andhra Pradesh

- Excavations indicate it as a Trade Centre of Early Historic Period.
- The site lies on the right bank of a distributary of river Swarnamukhi.
- The proximity of the site (at southern coastal location) to the seacoast suggests that the site could have served as a strategic settlement involved in maritime trade.
- Among many other antiquities unearthed are one life-size Vishnu sculpture and a wide variety of pottery of the early centuries of current era.
